THE "shanty-boat mystery" at Cincinnati has been cleared up, at last. George W. Still, who was found in his boat six weeks ago with his skull fractured and in an insensible condition, has finally recovered, and has told who his assailants were. According to his story, Joseph Russell and William Cox are the parties who beat him up so badly and then left him for dead, after taking $140 in cash, a check for $240, a watch, gold ring and other property. Russell is now in custody in Cincinnati, having been arrested at Ripley shortly after the tragedy with the check in his possession. It will be remembered that he tried to account for the check by claiming he got it from Wm. Ramsey, who was in jail in this city at the time of the attack on Still and the subsequent arrest. Cox lived here some years ago. He was arrested some weeks since, but the Cincinnati authorities released him, as they had no evidence against him. Still has had a warrant issued for him, however, and the police of Ripley and Cincinnati are on the lookout for him.

EMMA PEARL, colored, was found dead in one of the buildings in Owens' Row this morning by the other occupants of the house. The deceased was eighteen years old. Coronor M. T. Cockrell was summoned and held an inquest on the remains. The jury decided that death resulted from typhoid fever. From the evidence introduced, it was more a case of desuetude and want of proper care and treatment.

MRS. JOHN ALLEN, who came here about three weeks ago from her home in Poplar Plains, Fleming County, to attend Mrs. Jessie Clarke's art school, died yesterday afternoon in the Armstrong building, corner of Sutton and Third streets. She had been ill for several days, but her death was rather sudden and unexpected. Her remains were taken to her late home this morning. The deceased was a daughter of Thomas Darnall, who was, in his day, one of the wealthiest farmers of Fleming County. Her husband was a resident of this place at one time, but died several years ago.

GOOD BALLED. Thomas Goodin, who is charged with the murder of Wade Peeler in Rowan County some months ago, and who has been confined in the jail here since the last term of court in that county, was taken before Judge Cole Tuesday and admitted to bail in the sum of $3,000. He executed bond in the sum named with his brother, Samuel Goodin, of Morehead, and Colonel Z. T. Young, of Mt. Sterling, as sureties, and was released. He has been in bad health for several weeks, suffering from malarial fever. Dr. Browning, jail Physician, feared that the disease might terminate in typhoid fever, and thought it best, anyhow, that he be admitted to jail and taken away from the other prisoners. Goodin owns one or two small farms in Rowan County, and protests his innocence.

Atkins, Chief of Police, Knoxville, Tenn., writes: "My family and I are beneficiaries of your most excellent medicine, Dr. King's New Discovery for consumption; having found it to be all that you claim for it, desire to testify to its merits. A Fatal Affray Near Aberdeen.

Our correspondent at Aberdeen gives the following particulars of a terrible tragedy which occurred back of that place Wednesday: "A cutting affray which resulted in the killing of one man and the probably fatal wounding of another, took place at the farm of Mr. Alex. Martin, near here, Wednesday. Mr. Edgar Martin and two hired hands, named Wils. Purdum and John Beck, got into a difficulty over the division of some property, and in the fight which ensued Martin stabbed Purdum to the heart, killing him instantly. Martin also cut Beck so badly that there is but small chance for his recovery. Martin escaped and is still at large. He is said to be in Kentucky."

TWO LUNATICS ON A RAFT

THEY ESCAPE FROM THE ISLAND AND ARE WRECKED IN THE RIVER.

Then They Swim Back, Steal a Boat and Reach the City—After Wandering to the West Side Without Changing Their Attire, Garb They Are Arrested.

NEW YORK, Nov. 12.— Two bent figures almost entirely enveloped in blankets turned the corner of Fifty-third street and started rapidly but noiselessly down Tenth avenue shortly after 3 o'clock yesterday morning. Policeman McGinley, of the West Forty-seventh street station, who was on the opposite side of the avenue, was somewhat startled, but after a minute's thought he realized a sign of relief and mirthfulness. "They are half-starved Indians hunting for a square meal."

Just then, however, the strange looking pair passed under a street lamp, and the watching policeman was enabled to get a good look at them. "White men," he ejaculated, "and they are dressed like savages." Then he grasped his night stick tightly in his hand and started across the street in pursuit. As soon as the hardy the officers' footsteps they jumped into a boat and paddled off, getting into the river house, but the door was locked, and when the officer approached both began to plead for mercy. The officer saw they were shoeless and hatless, and pulling the blankets, which were torn through, from the covering front of the men, said that they were clothed in the garb worn by state prisoners. The clothing was also wet, and the men's teeth chattered as they spoke to the officer.

"Where are you men from?" asked the officer.

"We escaped from the lunatic asylum on Blackwell's Island to-night," replied one of the men, and as the officer started back a pace he continued: "Oh, you needn't be afraid we're not crazy; than you are and will go right along with you, for we're nearly dead from the cold."

McGinley took the two to the station house where they were consigned to cells after they had donned their apparel, which consisted of the regular state uniform of bayonetted shirt, breeches and cap as the blues, which were carried, were stamped "93." In the morning they were taken to the Yorkville court, where they created somewhat of a sensation. They gave their names as John J. Boyle, McLaughlin, aged forty-three, a carpenter and builder, and Corailline Enwright, aged thirty-two years, of this city. McLaughlin had said he had a wife and family living at 161 Front street, Brooklyn, and Enwright said that he lived with his uncle, Patrick O'Connor, at 34 Ward Eleven street, Brooklyn. Boyle had no family or dependents, McLaughlin, who acted as spokesman told the story of their escape, which is substantially as follows:

Both were confined in the same cell, and had frequently made futile efforts of escape. About two weeks ago they concluded that the only way in which they could escape was by getting through the window of their cell, which was in Ward 19, on the second floor. This, of course, they could have done at night, but tried to keep to the outside of this city. About a week ago they began at attacking the iron bars in the window, and they continued at this each night until Monday, when the bars weakened, and they pulled out enough to allow them to squeeze through. They then put on their shoes and clothing into a rope, by means of which they lowered themselves to the ground. They scoured the shore of the island and found some planking, which they bound together with their hair and made a raft to float on the frigid water. They then lashed the raft to the iron bars in the window, and then with planks as cars, endeavored to paddle across. The raft did not buoy enough until about 100 feet from the shore, when it struck the current. The two men then gave up the attempt, turned back, and the two men found themselves struggling in the water.

They swam back to the island and, nothing daunted, once more made a search for a boat to some point where they could reach this city. In this they were ineffectually successful. Tied to the immigrant wharf, near the north end of the island, they found a rowboat with the cars resting in the bottom. Then they appropriated and, pulling the boat ashore, they secured it to the Central and First street, this city. There they left the boat, landed and, it being then after 9 o'clock in the morning, walked across the city and then down, intending to board a ferryboat to Forty-second street and get into New Jersey. They took River Avenue One hundred and First street, until they met Folioconan McGinley, they had not been molested by a policeman.

"Neither I nor Enwright are insane," said McGinley. "It's a shame we were locked up in a lunatic asylum. We were arrested four weeks ago next Friday for intoxication. When I became sober I found myself in Belvieu hospital. A day or two afterwards I was sent to the lunatic asylum on Blackwell's Island. I was there for about ten hours and then twenty-four hours that I had perfectly recovered from the effects of my debauch and was perfectly sane. After being there a day or so I learned that they intended to keep me there and I found myself to be seven miles out of mind. To make my escape if such a thing was possible. After that I gave myself up entirely to thinking how to get out."

"I was arrested," said Enwright, "for wandering at my uncle during a drunken frenzy and was sent to the asylum. I don't desire to say that I am not insane, as I don't want to be tried and sent to prison for felonious assault."

"They express themselves as greatly afraid of being sent to prison, and I would like to see them committed and sent to the authorities at the insane asylum. Later in the day Dr. McDonald called at the jail and spoke very sharply to the keepers because they allowed the reporters to interview us. I asked him to give me an explanation of the fact that the prisoners could escape from the island, so easily. Shortly afterwards the prisoners were removed from the prison in an ambulance and were taken back to the asylum."
